Soletanche Freyssinet strengthens its presence in Latin America

Soletanche Freyssinet, the specialized civil engineering division of VINCI Construction, has taken its holding in the share capital of Freyssinet Espagne to 100%.

Freyssinet Espagne, which was previously jointly controlled with a Spanish partner, holds all of Soletanche Freyssinet's operations in the fields of structures (Freyssinet) and reinforced earth (Terre Armée) in the Iberian Peninsula, in Mexico and in South America.

Freyssinet Espagne posted 2013 revenue of €120 million, of which 80% was generated in Latin America. This latest move accelerates Soletanche Freyssinet's international expansion and raises the portion of its revenue made outside Europe to over 60%.

With the consolidation of a network of some 10 additional subsidiaries in Latin America, Soletanche Freyssinet will be in a position to better take advantage of the continent's growth potential, in synergy with the rest of the VINCI Group.

About Soletanche Freyssinet

Soletanche Freyssinet brings together a complementary set of expertise in specialized civil engineering and is a worldwide reference in ground technologies, structures and nuclear activities. Through Soletanche Bachy, Menard, Terre Armée, Freyssinet and Nuvia, the Group participates in the design-build, maintenance or repair of structures around the world.

In 2013, the Soletanche Freyssinet Group and its 20,000 employees worked on projects in around 100 countries to generate revenue of €2.5 billion.
